RSV Building Solutions Helps Secure Future Growth for Butcher Boys

VANCOUVER, Wash. – With the help of RSV Building Solutions, Butcher Boys, a long-time Vancouver butcher and retailer, recently expanded with the completed construction of its new retail space.

“RSV was truly a partner throughout this entire process.” said Butcher Boys Owner Jim Kurfurst. “In the long run, I feel that RSV not only provided me with an excellent product that will allow for my business to continue to grow, but they did it in a way that made me comfortable with the process and ended up saving me money.”

Butcher Boys moved from its old location in Vancouver, Wash., just a mile east to its new location at 4710 East Fourth Plain Boulevard. The new 5,000-square-foot space is larger than Butcher Boys’ previous location and has additional space to eventually expand to 8,000 square feet.

“Butcher Boys has such a long-standing history in the local community and I am very excited that RSV was a part of their continued growth and future success.” said Ron Frederiksen, president of RSV Building Solutions.

RSV began working with Butcher Boys three years ago to help the company find a suitable new space while also staying within the Fourth Plain area, which was an important goal for the owner. In addition, the move allowed Butcher Boys to own its space instead of rent, and further secure its long-term equity.

Once the new space for Butcher Boys was secured, RSV converted the building from its empty shell by upgrading insulation, adding interior framing, creating a retail sales and meat cutting area, installing a new HVAC system, and constructing an office space along with restrooms.

Jeff Lightheart with Architects Associative was the architect on the project.
